Planning Your Purchase

Why Buy?

Buying Florida real estate is often seen as a desirable, profitable and secure investment, particularly when coupled with favorable exchange rates. Florida properties are considered a good investment value as prices are higher for comparable properties in many other countries*.

If you are reading this publication, you have probably made the decision to buy a property in Florida, but understanding WHY you are buying will help your Realtor® identify the best property to meet your goals and aspirations.

- I Retirement – Florida has long been a popular retirement destination, but the state has seen an increase in pre-retirement purchases in recent years. Buyers see great values available in today's market and decide to purchase a property prior to their retirement. They often use the home for vacations or as a rental investment until they are ready to retire. Key factors to consider when purchasing a home for retirement may be proximity to shopping and entertainment, access to medical services and the ongoing costs associated with maintaining the property.

Buyers see great values available in today's market and decide to purchase a property prior to their retirement.

- I Holiday/Vacation Home – If you plan to use the property for one or more visits each year, a primary consideration may be something that needs little attention from you on a regular basis. A condominium or a home in a maintenance-free community may be the best fit and allow you to “lock and leave” the property, knowing it will be secure in your absence.
- I Investment – Buying an investment property is less about your personal preferences and more about the financial opportunity it represents for cash flow and capital appreciation when you sell. Care should be taken regarding rental restrictions which may apply in the county, community or subdivision where you plan to purchase. Check the rental rules and regulations for the specific condo or homeowners associations in the communities that interest you.
- I Relocation – If you and your family will be relocating to Florida to take a job assignment or as new resident, you may be more concerned with identifying a new home that is within easy commuting distance of your office, located in a family-focused community and near exceptional schools and educational opportunities.

What to Buy?

Florida has an abundance of communities that cater to specific lifestyles, whether you have an equestrian, golf, waterfront, boating or other interest. Home buyers and visitors enjoy an endless outdoor lifestyle, world-famous attractions and theme parks, plus an incredible variety of culture and fine arts — all vital ingredients that enrich their experience. Local communities are home to world-class health and medical facilities, art shows and festivals, many within a short distance of nearby residences.

- I Condominium – This form of homeownership offers individual units for sale within a larger building or complex. Contrary to popular belief, the term “condominium” does not apply to the type of unit itself, but the legal ownership arrangement. Those who purchase units in a condominium technically own everything from their walls inward. All individual homeowners have shared rights to most common areas, such as the elevators, hallways, pools and club houses. Maintenance of these areas becomes the responsibility of a condominium association. Every owner owns a share of interest in the condominium association, plus an obligation to pay monthly dues or special assessment fees for larger maintenance problems.

- I Single-Family Home – A detached residence usually has a front and backyard, plus a driveway and attached carport or garage. This type of property offers greater privacy and has no common walls with other residences. Single-family homes can be located in communities that have a homeowners' association and may also be maintenance-free, meaning the yard and sometimes other amenities are maintained by a third party.

- I Villa – Typically a single-story residence, this home may or may not be attached to another villa by a common wall. This type of property is typically in a maintenance-free community, in which the lawn/landscaping and sometimes other amenities are maintained by a third party, which is included in a community fee.

- I Townhome – This residence shares a building with other units. Typically more than one story, there are no other units above or below. These tend to be less expensive than single-family homes, may have a small fenced yard or garage and are part of a community association that typically covers all exterior maintenance.

- I Commercial – This type of property is for business or investment purposes and includes office, retail, industrial and multi-family buildings (apartment complexes), marinas and land zoned for single-family homes.

Where to Buy?

As Florida's leading real estate brokerage company, Coldwell Banker Residential Real Estate covers a larger area than any other brokerage in the state. More than 75 Florida offices serve buyers and sellers throughout Central Florida, Palm Beach, Southeast Florida, Southwest Florida and Tampa Bay.

Central Florida

Only one destination on the planet combines a tropical climate and relaxed lifestyle with the world's most popular tourist attractions. Central Florida stands in a class of its own as a desirable place to visit or live, brimming over with amenities that guarantee an unrivaled quality of life.

Central Florida includes the Metro Orlando area – encompassing Orange, Seminole and Osceola counties, plus part of Volusia County – and nearby Flagler and Brevard counties on the Atlantic coast. The sheer variety of settings in this dynamic region combine to offer quality lifestyle options that seem virtually unlimited. Newcomers will discover quaint rural towns, upscale residential enclaves, loft-style luxury condominiums in the heart of the city, and beautiful neighborhoods where ancient oaks shade meticulous landscaping. Although Central Florida has been among the nation's fastest-growing regions for several decades, the cost of living remains surprisingly low.

Palm Beach

Imagine 14 miles of subtropical beachfront, world-renowned for its privileged lifestyle, regal mansions and magnificent architecture. The western part of the county is mostly agricultural, with large lakes that offer exceptional freshwater fishing. Palm Beach has been a favorite destination for over a century, with a rich history of alluring millionaires and celebrities with its pristine beaches, recreational amenities, balmy climate, scenic beauty and international reputation for dining and shopping.

Old-world architecture in lavish Mediterranean style characterizes the area, and cultural attractions abound. Housing ranges from condominiums and retirement villas to master-planned developments with private country clubs and luxurious estates. Diversified business includes high technology, aerospace, manufacturing, engineering, communications, electronics and business services. Many prestigious corporations have relocated their national headquarters into this growing area.

Southeast Florida

As one of North America's most exciting areas, this blending of cosmopolitan urban centers creates a diverse region that welcomes every imaginable lifestyle. New residents appreciate the relaxed, casual lifestyle of this dynamic region brimming over with amenities.

South Florida is a vibrant, cosmopolitan business region with a healthy economic climate. Miami and Fort Lauderdale are experiencing rapid growth and development. New businesses and corporations realize the wealth of opportunity in this beautiful region, where employees enjoy living in one of the world's most desirable locations. Spanish Mediterranean architecture, outdoor plazas and tree-shaded boulevards offer a magnificent backdrop for shopping, dining, nightlife and the arts.

Southwest Florida

This area combines the waterfront locales of Sarasota, Manatee, Charlotte, Lee and Collier counties. Sarasota's world-renowned white sandy beaches anchor Florida's western coast near the northern edge of the subtropics, 60 miles south of Tampa Bay.

Sarasota boasts gated waterfront estates with manicured grounds and spectacular views. Whether your taste in art leans toward classical paintings, ballet, symphony and opera or modern performances, your hunger can be satisfied in this cultural center of Florida.

Further south, Naples is also home to world-class entertainment, with the Naples Philharmonic Center for the Arts, many theaters, and shopping and dining along the waterfront. Naples is also home to numerous championship golf courses designed by the likes of Palmer, Nicklaus, Norman and Hills. The area boasts exceptional medical facilities, along with a variety of recreational sites from playgrounds to tennis centers.

Tampa Bay

This entire region is served by a strategic, efficient infrastructure of international airports, deepwater ports, rail and highway systems, transit authorities and multi-hemisphere shipping capability. Rich in education, the Tampa Bay region provides quality public and private schools, plus access to technical institutes, community colleges, the University of South Florida and the University of Tampa. Extended-study centers and a range of convenient campus locations ensure opportunities for quality education at affordable rates.

Healthcare resources are outstanding in this region, where exceptional hospitals and research centers represent every specialty. The presence of leading biomedical technology firms and acclaimed health sciences education and teaching institutions is continually raising healthcare service standards to higher levels of advancement. The H. Lee Moffitt Cancer Center, for example, enjoys an international reputation.

Frequently Asked Questions

What are the tax implications for foreigners owning U.S. property?

Many and varied! There are income tax implications if the property is to be rented, capital gains tax considerations when the home is sold, and possible estate tax issues. It is important to consider these BEFORE you purchase a property, and to take the appropriate professional advice on how the property should be titled – your name, a limited company, cross-border trust, etc. The approach will vary, depending upon your citizenship and personal circumstances. Your sales associate will be happy to refer you to a professional who specializes in international taxation.

As a buyer, why should I work with a Realtor®?

In your home country, you may be accustomed to working with several real estate agents to be sure you see all properties that are available in the market. Here in Florida, you have the benefit of a computerized Multiple Listing System (MLS), which contains details of almost all properties available in a specific market, and can be accessed by licensed Realtors®. This allows you to choose a Realtor® you feel comfortable with and who has knowledge of the local market, as well as the issues you must be aware of as a foreign buyer. Some services your Realtor® will provide include negotiating the best possible terms for your purchase, protecting your interests in the contract, and introducing you to and coordinating with other professionals who will be needed for a successful transaction. A real estate agent who represents a buyer is usually compensated by the agent who lists the property, so these services are normally offered to buyers at no charge.

Will I get a better deal if I work directly with the listing agent?

This is a common misconception. Remember, the listing agent works for the seller of the property. The seller pays the listing agent a commission, which is shared with the agent who brings the buyer. The seller pays the same commission, whether there is one agent involved or two. Having your own Realtor® representing you in the negotiations will ensure you are provided with impartial advice and objective analysis of the property and its price, condition, location, etc.

What about buying new construction? Is it better to work directly with the builder?

When working with a salesperson in a new construction environment, be aware that they are employed by the builder to sell homes. It is not their job to educate consumers objectively on the area or the pros and cons of their particular development. The idea that a buyer will get a better price from the builder if the builder does not pay a Realtor® commission is a myth. Many builders pay Realtor® commissions from a separate marketing budget, so they are not factors in discounting a property. Realtors® know how much each property sold for in a particular development and would not bring buyers to a builder if two-tier pricing was in place. A typical builder makes more than 80% of their sales from Realtor® introductions and they will not jeopardize such a significant source of business.

Do foreign nationals pay more in property taxes and homeowner's insurance?

No. Property taxes are influenced by whether the home you buy is your primary residence or not. A second homeowner from New Jersey or Ohio pays the same taxes as one from Canada, the U.K. or any other part of the world. The cost of homeowners insurance is based upon the risk associated with the location, occupancy and condition of the subject property. It bears no relation to the nationality of its owner.

How can I protect myself against fluctuations in the currency exchange rate?

There are a number of ways you can accomplish this, and your sales associate will be happy to introduce you to a specialist in the foreign exchange market. They can offer you better exchange rates than most commercial banks, and a number of tools that will allow you to time your exchange to maximum benefit. They will also allow you to fix an exchange rate now and into the future to help pay running costs, condo fees, etc.

What are the pros and cons of new construction versus re-sale?

There are varying opinions on which purchase is better, as the value lies within the buyer's objectives. Here are a few of the more common considerations:

- I Amenities – Buyers have more opportunity to choose a color palette and select materials to their preference, such as ceramic tile instead of carpet and better-quality appliances. New homes tend to be more energy-efficient and more likely to meet code standards. An older home will reflect mature landscaping and is often located in an established community with historic charm. Many new subdivisions offer neighborhood clubhouses, swimming pools, playgrounds, bike and jogging trails and picnic venues for residents. Older homes don't, although many have better access to urban shopping venues and restaurants because they reflect prior self-containing city-planning philosophies.

- I Energy efficiency – Advantage: new construction. New-home designers can use new building materials such as Energy Star® windows, thicker insulation and other technology that will lower future energy costs for the owner. Most states now have minimum energy-efficiency requirements for new construction. Kitchens and laundry areas in new homes are designed to house more efficient energy-saving appliances.

- Landscaping – Mature trees, robust shrubs, gardens, rose bushes and perennially well-watered lawns are some of the rewards of an older home, while most new homes are apt to feature younger, smaller trees, fewer walkways and sparse vegetation. Landscaping is an expensive proposition today for the cost-conscious home builder.
- Location – Often older homes are in areas closer to town and in established neighborhoods. However, newer subdivisions can provide newer schools and recreational areas.
- Maintenance – The charm of an older home often goes hand in hand with increased maintenance, especially if the previous owners were not attentive to upkeep. Building materials may be harder to replace or match in an expansion or remodeling. A new home generally comes with at least a one-year warranty for the repair of some problems that may develop as it settles into its foundation. But know what your warranty covers. Extended warranties are available should your property be out of warranty. New-construction homes often employ more efficient, innovative uses of square footage and property.
- Price – New construction homes may cost more than re-sale homes due to the increasing labor and material costs. There is often more negotiating room with re-sales as well.
